The demagogues who go about the country stirring up the "too susceptible hands" to "turn out" and tramp for miles to some meeting convenient to a grocery or grog-shop, where benzine whisky is retailed at five cents a gill, are the Alurics and Attilus of our State who carry desolution in their match who carry desolution in their mater.
It is a great folly to hope or pray for the extinction of these demagogues, or to seek to convince our colored brethren that they are getting beyond their depth, and will pursue their political aspirations to their own ruin and destruction. That is a foregone ruin and destruction. That is a foregone conclusion. It will only be a little worse with them than with a large class of white people who give themselves up to politics, and forever afterward become drones and loafers, subsisting upon and taxing the honest labor of others. Our planters must, therefore, to save thomselves and the coun try from a decline of production, look to e other labor than that of our colored coliticians and suffragans. In France, it must be confessed, the "common people" are immensely superior in apparent good breeding to the same classes in this country (England). Class distinctions are strong; but, except from a political point of view, or from the provocation of poverty, they excite but little jealously. There is not half the clamoring after "position in society," the hankering after a superior grade to] their own, that makes the life of so many people in England a burden to them. But different classes see more of each other, and know more of each other in France. They do not push themselves among one another in private life, but they recognize their respective relations with more practical respect than is commonly shown in this country. Thus master and servant, with equal regard to master and servant, with equal regard to ed lying on the track, but too late to prether relative positions, hold far more irriendly intercourse; and the same distinction may be noticed in the relations to be that of Mr. Brannon, who, when last

An old planter who visited the place day before yesterday reports that they were doing work which negro laborers could not be got to do to wit. getting wood out of a swamp, where they had to wade and work all day above their ankles in water. They were cheerful, active and zealous to a degree which made our old planter sigh for a few such on his own plantation. With such laborers, or a tair proportion of them, we could soon revive our sugar production, and in these lowlands raise all the sugar and rice that would be needed for consumption in the United States. The need of this new labor is especially impressed upon our planters by the general neglect of the negroes of their industrial employments, in order to devote themselves to patriotic and political duties. Conditions—no sye-gonging; but stand up, knock-down' roll-over, rough-and-tumble dog fight. The seconds then gave notice that any man entering, offering to part or to show foul play, would be shot, each exhibiting a heavy navy revolver, unless that one of the parties or his second, in case of his inability, should ry "enough," or one of the combatants 'knocked to death." Campbell and Foster then shook hands, and each stepped back three paces, and then a come-together that would have chilled the blood of a Heenan Marissey, was the work of an instant. First 71/2 minutes Foster was terribly punished, but he bore it like a martyr, and then Foster took the lead, and Oampbell evidently got the worst of it for the next 5 minutes. At 12 minutes the parties grappled, and a desperate tussle ensued, in which Foster was out-generaled, he falling under. Cheking came in play, and Foster was badly strangled. His second called out to bim to get out from under, which was only the work of a moment, until he broke Campbell's hold and arose to his feet with Campbell's fingers in his mouth which Campbell bore with more than ordinary pluck, contenting himself with milling Foster in the face with his fist, whilst Foster was carrying Campbell about the ring on his back. Choking, souffling and biting lasted about eight minutes, when Campbell broke hold and each took an apright position. The pummeling had told on both parties—they were nearly exhausted, and represented two gory pillars. They each took a respectful view of the other, and each evidently feared the result of the next encounter.
